

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Lora Reynolds Gallery is pleased to present a film screening of Grand Paris Texas (54 min) by Austin based artists Teresa Hubbard and Alexander Birchler.

The screening will be held on Thursday, September 9 at Austin's historic Paramount Theater. Doors will open at 6pm with the film beginning at 7pm. A conversation between the Director of the Blanton Museum of Art, Ned Rifkin, and the artists will follow the screening.

Grand Paris Texas explores the history, people and catalysts that have imprinted the small Texas town of Paris. The town was made iconic thanks to Wim Wenders's acclaimed 1984 feature film Paris, Texas. However, for the town's residents, only a ghostly notoriety came from the film; production and footage of Paris were never actually manifested, only alluded to by the film. The rich central protagonist lying at the heart of Hubbard / Birchler's video is The Grand - a time-weathered, abandoned downtown movie theater. The artists use the striking imagery of this bird-infested theater and interviews with members of the community to explore the role of cinema and the identity of Paris, Texas.

In connection with the film, a selection of Hubbard / Birchler's photographs relating to Grand Paris Texas will be on view at Lora Reynolds Gallery from September 9 through September 11. The artists will give a talk in the gallery on Saturday, September 11 at 2pm.

Both events will be free and open to the public.
